Supervision, training and development for youth workers $330,500

Youth workers and youth organisations in Canterbury had been struggling to support greater volumes of young people with more complex issues since the earthquakes. This grant provided the region's 200 youth workers with training and supervision, as well as strengthening their vital networks. The grant was made to Canterbury Youth Workers Collective and Canterbury Youth Services; both strong and respected organisations that had the support of local Councils, CERA and the Ministry of Youth Development, Ministry of Education, Family and Community Services. Over two years it will also help youth organisations that are struggling, volunteers who help youth organisations, establish support networks in suburbs, and help young people to have a collective voice in the recovery.

iPads, Netbooks and software for 11 eastern suburbs schools $410,000

On the first day of term this year, 2,486 children living in Christchurch's eastern suburbs arrived at school to find new digital learning devices with software, just for them. The initiative of the Greater Christchurch Schools Network, funded by the Appeal Trust, is to help the learning of children in the most earthquake-impacted areas and utilises the wireless infrastructure provided by the Ministry of Education. An advantage of portable devices is that they can be redeployed as decisions are made about future school locations in greater Christchurch.

In 2012, the Appeal Trust funded another Greater Christchurch Schools Network initiative to install video conferencing for 18 earthquake-damaged secondary schools so students could keep studying a full range of subjects.
